CHERRY PECTORAL

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING-COUGH, CROUP, ASTHMA, AND CONSUMPTION.

This remedy is offered to the community with the confidence we feel that it will do all that can be reasonably expected of any medicine, when its virtues are known. We do not, however, claim for it the power of a specific in all cases of pulmonary disease, but we do claim for it a power over them, which we believe no other medicine now before the public possesses. Of its ultimate success in the cure of Consumption, we have the testimony of many of our most respectable citizens, that it has in their cases, been attended with the most decisive benefit. Of its effect in the cure of Bronchitis, Whooping-Cough, Croup, Asthma, and other pulmonary complaints, we have the testimony of many of our most respectable citizens, that it has

...ciegnty the sovereignty of the Constitution, the sovereignty of the best system that we could devise, has no inferior claim

That is our own system, let us say in passing, is the best for us and for all extended empires, we are, for our part, more and more persuaded, the more we reflect upon it, that is to say, a union of general, and state administrations — The general government secures order and peace among the several departments, among what would otherwise be, as in Germany, hostile and warring dukedoms and states At the same time the local or state administration will best take care of local or state interests. A consolidated government like the old Roman empire, annihilate sovereignty, ruling over dependent provinces, and sending out pro consuls to govern them, will always do great injustice — Thus, no such a pro consul, a stranger, sent into a so no distant central government here, to Massachusetts, to represent the national sovereignty for a year or two and then to be superseded by another and compare this with our own, one for our distinctness, and you will immediately feel the difference We do not believe that the wit of man has ever devised or ever will devise a better system than this union of national and state sovereignty To us it is the best and for us it is a holy thing

After deservedly bringing in forcible language what our statesmanship should be, he passes to the following just criticism upon our National Congress He says

Public sentiment has tolerated in politicians, legislators aye in congressmen, what it would endure in no other men charged with important trusts Congressmen

Now what strange theory is this body of men It is a representative body It meets for legislation on our interests it is charged with the care of them it is sworn to that duty it is paid for the service A whole district of people cannot go to Washington to attend to the affairs and the general affairs of the republic It chooses a man to go in its stead — to act for it, just as the stockholders of a bank choose a body of directors to take care of their interest and the common interest of the institution

Now we will not ask what would be thought of a bank in which the room of a bank the 10 were given, or in which blows were struck, or a pistol drawn — the general reprobation on both in and out of Congress has stamped such acts clearly enough but we ask, what would be thought of the directors whom they had chosen to watch over and advance their interests should occupy themselves with at every meeting with canvassing for the next president of the board with making long speeches, not about anything in hand but only in the interest of certain political parties — speeches so irrelevant to the proprietors as entirely uncalled for so wearisomely repetitious, such mere stump speeches, that nobody listened to them while some of very important matters at each meeting were entirely neglected, and others hasty decided upon just as the meeting was breaking up?

We need not say what would be thought of it, and we need not ask what our readers have been thinking of, while we have made this supposition We know that is a picture of that august body, the supreme legislature of this country and especially of the popular branch of it for we mainly except from the charge the superior branch, the Senate Speaking there is generally a real contribution to the business in hand

But how wide and ... with the other branch? What is it they occupies more than half of each session? Is it a careful examination of the state of the country of the needs of the country of the relief of one class and another of the citizens of patent laws, of revenue laws, of the various appropriations for the public service? Far from it It is making speeches from morning till night for party ends or for personal interest with the members' constituents, It is making speeches — for Buncombe we believe, as the phrase, — speeches which positively are not debates which are addressed to an absent member and just as irrelevant to any business before the house, which are mere repetitions of threadbare partizan diatribes which nobody listens to, which are not intended to be heard by any body there present, but to be printed and read out of doors, while the most important business of the country is neglected and postponed, and at last is huddled up and hurried through, pell mell, in the two or three closing days of the session

Such sham debate is a fraud upon the nation It is a gross falsehood stamped upon the brow of the national honor It it were not on this account a most serious thing it would be in other views the most ludicrous thing it would be to see the most ludicrous members can bear it — We wonder that they do not grow thin upon such meagre diet, that their minds at least do not waste and decay We are astonished that honest, and high minded men — for such there are in Congress — can do it in spring Why, we could not bear a creaking windmill before our eyes long, though it grown much earn — But these windmills grind out nothing unless it be the grist that was ground yesterday It is all wind and creaking

We aver that this is a most extraordinary anomaly in legislation nothing like it was ever known in the British Parliament, or the French Chambers or anywhere else It is it to settle down into a custom here Is it to be acquiesced in among us We are very sorry to hear so much like arguments once freq tently expressed and for this very reason because we think the public mind needs to be aroused to this evil we speak our mind the more plainly "Let them talk," it is said, "there is no harm in this, be far talk than legislate, the more speeches the fewer laws, so much the better

This reckless language, too often heard, is a double injustice to the legislature it is saying as if we spoke of fools and not of wise men "Let them make what sport they will among themselves as they do nothing worse No, we say, demand of legislators that they be true sincere, honest men Demand that they do the business of the nation When that is done, let them go home They are wanted at home for all else long sessions are not good for them, to many of them they are a great inconvenience, and even an unhappiness to some Let such, then, abate the nuisance of idle and sham speaking Let them, if nothing else will do, apply the rough check of the British Parliament let them shuttle and cough down such automaton orators That would be honest and manly, it is not courteous It is not manly nor honest to suffer such systematic falsehood to be perpetrated in the presence of the legislature, and before the face of the nation Besides, there is a great deal to be done by Congress and there is a great deal which, through this boundless toleration and license of speech, fails to be done yet

We are not using this strong language without warrant We have seen, and if not for ourselves, for our neighbors, have felt the evil that we speak of

We shall now venture upon a criticism on the course of things in our national legislature, of a much wider application, and that is upon the wide-sidedness of almost all debate and action there. What, in right theory, is a legislature? It is a body of men met together to consult with one another upon the common welfare, and to make laws and ordinances for the whole people A court of justice is a totally different thing There, parties come, lawyers properly represent them, and there is a judge to sum up the arguments in the case. A legislature is a council, where each member is bound to contribute what he can to the right thinking and action of the whole body. Must it, then, always be, and shall we never see anything better — that almost affidavits in such a body shall forever be a mere one sided, special pleading, that scarcely one speaker shall ever be found to see anything right in the argument of his opponent, for opponents of course there must be, — but that the whole business, action, speech of opponents shall aim to assail, vilify, and circumvent one another, and that the legislative assembly shall be a bear garden, rather than a grave and dispassionate council Such is the fashion in legislation of this 19th century, but we predict with confidence, if civilization much advances, that world will see a new thing in its loftiest spheres for reasoning and action It is no wonder that the words politician, statesman, member of Congress, or of Parliament, which ought to mean some of the greatest things — things of the highest dignity in the world, do not mean so now Why, the theologians, the physicians, the sarants, are beginning to drop these old modes of discussion It is bad taste, bad the one, bad judgment. If we wanted to make simply the greatest impression, the best speech, — we would fairly weigh and admit the force of opposing arguments, but how often, we pray to know, is such a thing heard in Congress?

On that lofty theatre men are striving for an honorable fame And for noble ambition there is no nobler theatre Who would not deserve well of his country. Who would not commit his name in trust to its annals and archives Who would not honorably interwave his life's story with the history of his country, — of its science, its literature, its arts, or its governments But no base life shall ever win the "mighty meed" of that illustrious honor No grand echoes from the bosom of future time shall return to celebrate the tricks and shams of low minded, unprincipled partisan politicians

SATURDAY, JULY 26, 1851.

A few Hours in Marlborough.

On a delightful day, not long since, we were one of a pleasant social family party ridin along, the shore road from Salem towards Boston, and in our determination to get the nearest possible to the ocean, we more than once were obliged to a halt by finding the end of the road at some delightful rural dwelling, looking out upon one side upon the cool, lively sea and on the other upon a well cultivated farm and cool hills the house it sat resting in a bosom of flowers and fragrant shadows From such points we retraced our steps to take by shading road land ing still farther on our way The day was one to be enjoyed, and it occasionally as we rode through a bright and wood tangled region our party gave voice to the stirring song and sent its echoes along the valleys or, coming to some the prospect of a sand land, where the hand of delicate skill had wrested from the frowns of nature and long neglect a beautiful spot, and erected a gracefull cottage in our sandals with the luxuries of refinement, and produced the most agreeable contrasts between art and nature and the ruggedness of nature's wildness the surprise and pleasure of all were expressed, we at length entered the ancient town of Marblehead and traced its winding streets until we reached its extreme point, a romantic spot named The Fort

Here our party received a cordial and quite unexpected welcome of the resident of the Government House, the daughter of Sergeant Twist, Mrs Maria T Perkins, and her accomplished daughter, and an agreeable one, he there on a visit The little ones of the party were well provided for while the more active spread a repast upon the rocks, and others were busily engaged in a tending to the constant nibbles and sharp bites of the gunners along the base of the sea washed cliffs

A few hours were here greatly enjoyed, some in fire licking in the salt water, some in fishing some in viewing the remains of the Fort and each according to his bent It is a charming spot for a social party The fish are ever patient to the first dip of the baited hook, and the sea breeze fans with delicious coolness the heated brow. The decaying fort and the dilapidated garden speak of a port of abandonment of the place by the government and who should fortifications, as this once was, be necessary in the present advance of civilization among men? Why should our government be yearly expending millions on millions of dollars to keep up military establishments except perhaps to make a show of strength among the uncivilized Indians who have been treated so unevenly? But we have no occasion in this article to discuss these questions We will rather for this time give the argument on the other side as furnished by the lady now occupying the government property here She declared it the profession of the soldier is not honorable and respected as it should be the old war worn soldiers are forgotten and turned coldly out upon the world But whatever may be said of farmers, and mechanics and sailors, all well enough in their ways there would be no government if it were not for the brave soldiers, they are the true stay and staff of the country, and they maintain the government and preserved the liberties of the people, and have always done so, and yet they have been a despised and persecuted set, ever since the crucifixion of the Saviour! She was said with a glow of earnestness particularly no little of the father, Sergeant Twist's spirit, and could only then be answered with the expression of a hope that a better day will come when men shall learn to love and perform good deeds to each other instead of going to war

The pleasant hours spent on this romantic point of rocks will long be remembered and tempt us here again in future rambles A little note to Mrs Perkins of the intended visit of our party would have obviated the necessity of making any preparation as she has accommodations for pleasure parties and could easily provide for them if once in the way of it. The agreeable miss of her daughter, and all the incidents of our visit, have made an agreeable impression upon our mind, and even the hasty musings of "the little shoe maker" in search of fishing poles, a matter over which we have had many hearty laughs.

We ought, perhaps, to say here that Mrs Perkins has her sorrows of the heart and the trials growing out of unsatisfied anxieties — Her husband, a kind and worthy man, of whom she speaks with the highest regard and with the tenderest feelings, several years since left her to fulfil a short business engagement in another place, since which he has not returned, nor any definite tidings been obtained of him or of his fate. For a long series of years she has waited with hope deferred, making the heart sick, and yet no tidings have come.

This noted town was settled in 1631, and has long been, as it now is, deeply interested in the fishing business, and of late years has been increasing in manufactures, particularly in the manufacture of boots and shoes. Here is frequently to be seen a small patch of ground, between the out cropping ledges, on which is a neat dwelling, while perched upon the ledge is a small shop for the manufacture of shoes.— Here the occupants can look upon the island-decked bay and catch the sea breeze, while near at hand ride their boats near the shore, and in which in hours of relaxation they can fish and sail, and at any time in a few minutes obtain a pin of fine fish

Mr Mackey here has a fine nursery and orchard of plum trees, and among them, for sale next spring, three hundred trees of the famous Bangor McLaughlin plum

There are some beautiful dwellings here with every attention to rural beauty The people are industrious and thriving and only need a wiser system of division of the proceeds of labor and business to make them all in easy circumstances, but here as elsewhere the big fish are still at opt to effect prejudicially the small ones, and the long pocket of capital to reach rather too far over on to the side of labor

In an endeavor to get out of this town by some other road than that by which we entered it we found ourselves out on the broad pebbly beach looking towards Nahant, and after having sufficiently enjoyed the scenery we returned to the old track and at length turned off towards Swampscott beach and the active city of Lynn and returned at night-fall, by a country road, to our place of departure in the morning

☞ The Lowell Courier states that Benj F Spofford, for some time connected with Johnson & Co's Lowell and New York Express, via Stony Brook Railroad, has been missing since Monday P M Whether he has jumped into the canal, or fled to parts unknown, is an anxious question with several interested parties It seems that Spofford has been appropriating to his own use sums of money entrusted to his care for various persons The Courier office comes in for a smart share of the forced loan

☞ In Cincinnati forty manufacturers are engaged in producing oil and candles from lard Last year they threw out manufactured 1 110 000 gallons of oil and 6 120 000 lbs sterine, which was worked up into candles. Both the oil and candles are extensively used in Cincinnati, and are rapidly superseding every description of fish oil, for illuminating purposes, throughout the West. For lubricating the surface of machinery, it is considered superior to sperm

Experiments tried with Plaster of Paris

To the Editor of the Whig and Courier

I have been for some time trying experiments of late with plaster, for purifying the atmosphere about my out buildings, cellar &c and the result of those experiments has amply remunerated me for my trouble, and feeling desirous that the public may be benefitted thereby, I thought proper to lay the subject before your readers

I first tried the use of plaster as a purifier, in my cellar In the spring there had been left in my cellar some decayed vegetables such as turnips, potatoes, &c, and to the sanitary nerves, the scent of the gases arising from them became very offensive I removed all the rubbish, but still the scent remained I then dusted the bottom of the cellar with plaster, after the manner of sanding the floor, when the atmosphere was instantaneously rendered perfectly pure I then tried the experiment about my privy and hog house, and with equal success I then tried its use in allaying the stench about my calf pen, and stable where I was stall-feeding my oxen and the effects were truly wonderful I have found that the disagreeable effluvia arising from carrion, even, may be instantly allayed by the use of plaster And the writer would confidently recommend its use about the slaughter houses and meat market, the atmosphere of which may be rendered perfectly pure and with but trifling expense And he has no doubt that the disagreeable scent arising from the bilge-water, &c, in vessels and steamboats may be allayed in the same manner Let all who would guard against contagious diseases incident to this season of the year, take every precaution by purifying their premises with Plaster of Paris

Respectfully yours,

M S GREENELL

THE BROWING UP OF THE AMERICAN STEAMER SARAH. The Panama Star gives the following particulars relative to the destruction of the steamer Sarah, at Rio Janeiro:—

Captain Veacock, of the barque Minnesota, at this port from Rio Janeiro, reports, that on the 8th of June, the steam tow boat Sarah, owned by the highly respectable American firm of Hobbs & Alvarange, ship chandlers, while in the act of taking stores to a schooner, which cleared on the 6th, and three miles out of the harbor, bound to the coast of Africa supposed on a trading voyage, and owned by one Romeo, a notorious slave trader, was seized by the commander of the British steamer Cormorant, who ordered her crew to be imprisoned on board his vessel, and the vessel to be blown up, which was promptly executed. Messrs. Hobbs and Alvarange represented the matter to the American Minister, and assured his Excellency that their towboat was engaged in no avocation but what was strictly legal and in accordance with the maritime laws of the country. The American sloop of-war Dale, Commander Pearson, lay in the harbor, affording the United States Minister ample power to arrest the Cormorant's crew, and blow that vessel up, but in accordance with his established coolness and great judgment, he submitted the matter to the Federal Government, where doubtless, reparation and apology will be demanded

Extensive Robbery.

Yesterday forenoon, between ten and twelve o'clock, a robbery of $3000 in gold dust, was effected at the Adams House, in this city It seems that two brothers by the name of Dudley, and a gentleman named Brown, who, we learn are all citizens of Maine, arrived here on Monday last, after two years residence in California, bringing with them something under $4000 They intended to remain but a few days before going home The money was all in one room The packages of the elder Dudley and Mr Brown, amounting to $3,000, were carefully stowed away in a carpet bag, and the remainder, between seven and eight hundred dollars, in a trunk near by Everything was undisturbed at ten o'clock yesterday morning, when the gentlemen left their room to look round the city On their return a few hours after, they found the door forced, the carpet bag cut or torn completely open and the packages gone The trunk was not touched, an oversight probably, owing to the hurry of the robber! No clue is obtained as to the thief — We trust however, that the almost proverbial vigilance and promptness of our police will be able to apprehend the offender It certainly is a case which calls strongly for sympathy and aid —[Boston Advertiser

The Messrs Dudley are from Hampden and better men never dug gold or engaged in business

SUICIDE AND ATTEMPT TO MURDER IN CONCORD — Mr Stephen Lancot of Cornish, who has been a habitual drinker of intoxicating liquors for a long time, while in a paroxysm of delirium tremens, made an attempt to murder his wife on Monday last, inflicting on the side of her face and throat a deep wound with a razor, exposing the windpipe but did not, from the position of her face, reach any large vessels so as to cause her death as he intended, and then with a broad axe cut his own throat, dividing the windpipe and the soft parts in the front of the neck back to the vertebra or spine, causing almost immediate death He had in his family, besides his wife two sons, a mother and five children. He gathered his family together in the house, closed the doors and windows, probably to prevent the escape of the family, from which fact it is evident that he intended to have murdered the whole family, and called his wife into his room, who came in and seated herself on the side of the bed where he lay Having provided himself with a razor and bludgeon which he had concealed he seized his wife and inflicted the wound above described but his wife seized the razor and wresting it from his hand threw it out of the window and fled from the room, screaming for help He finding that he had not killed his wife and was likely to be defeated in his plan, cut his own throat with the razor We learn that Mrs Lancott is not expected to live. He had in his possession some six quarts of rum at the time the deed was done This is another illustration of the baneful effects of intemperance. [Repository.
